The upper part is carved à jour (undercut) as a hedgehog standing upon an oval base-plate, the fillings between front and rear legs being perforated to take a suspension filament. Its prickles are indicated by cross-hatching, and the eyes and ears by black dots under the hard, blue-green glaze. On the base within an oval border-line is inscribed intaglio a good wish: 'May Bastet grant happiness every day'. Bastet was a cat goddess whose cult was widespread in Egypt but was focused at Bubastis in the Delta. For discussion of the hedgehog in ancient Egypt, see von Droste zu Hülshoff (1980).
