Dr. G.W. Harley, the American Missionary of Ganta in north-east Liberia between the wars, was the source of the great collection in the Peabody Museum at Harvard, on which for many years our knowledge and understanding of the Dan was largely based. He also collected for other institutions and collectors and the present small group was acquired some years after his death.

This mask, along with masks 843d, g, and j, are the 'tangkagle' type since they have ears, often called the 'beautiful woman' mask.
